'Isn't it fasclusting? she asks in her inevitable postseript. No, I cannot agree with Georgiana. It has no fascination to me, inasmuch as she has always signed herself, 'Lovingly, Georgie,'"

Eaton began to pace the room, and as he thought over Georgiana's letter he grew more disturbed in mind. It was all about Lent and sewing bees and flower guilds and parish aid societies and the new minister. The pastor said purple was the proper Lenten color, and she had a new gown of that shade in which she looked "perfectly Aside from purple being the penitential color, the new minister adored it, of course, after his college colors, orange and black. He was a Princeton man.

"A Princeton cad, probably!" thought Eaton as he continued to make a circuit of his room every half minute. "Girls are silly over the cloth and brass buttons. One is as bad as the other." All the prejudices Eaton ever had against ministers and girls and humanity in general came trooping into his ruffled thoughts.

He and Georgiana, although they were not definitely engaged, had more or less of an understanding as to their future, and since he had been in Boston Georgiana's letters had been a the handle to 'Full,' will she gang full said 22rd day of February, 1998.

Eaton sareastically.

One of the first things he did after receiving Georgiana's letter was to send her a book of stamps, with the request that she continue her letters you for much less than it cost me."to him and not convert the stamps into money for her-her contribution box. Eaton wanted to use some impolite adjectives before writing contribution box, but, in deference to Georgiana, he refrained.

The stamps falled in their purpose, for Georgiana did not write often, and doing, her letters were brief and devoted to a recital of her Lenten duties. Once she tell him how lovely she looked in that royal purple gown and to express a wish that he might see her in it. Eaton echoed a portion of her wish only. He lenged to see Georgiana, but vision, always, if fate so willed it.

The second week before Easter wrote-not you in particular. Georgiana said that she would not be able to write at all during boly week, as there was so much to do. "Yes," added Carelton, "Georgiana's a trump of a sister for a rising young curate." He was not ministerial in his manner of talking to his sister.

"Well, I say, Carelton, suppose you go now and study up on the marriage service," said Eaton hintfully. And when Carelton looked back as he left the study he decided to take Eaton's advice.

The Skipper's Comment.

A burly, thick headed skipper had been given the command of a little steam collier. Going up with great pride on to the bridge of his new ship, the first thing that caught his eye was the engine room telegraph. "What's that for?" he demanded. "Why, that goes down to the engine room," was the reply. "You see all the orders on it—'Full speed, 'Half,' 'Slow,' 'Stop.'

You just have to move the hande."
